NEW YORK (N. Y.), 5; PHILADELPHIA (N. J.), 3.

One would not wish to see a prettier game of base ball than the one played by the New York and Philadelphia (N. J.) clubs on the Polo grounds yesterday. It was a scintillating contest from beginning to end, and at no time was the victory in doubt until the last man was retired in the ninth inning. There was enough hitting on both sides, as well as some mighty clever bunting. Both teams were very evenly matched, and the players were on their toes.

Sullivan, the Brooklyn pitcher, had his pitchers with Clements, their well-trained catcher to receive his delivery. Russel, not being satisfied with the work of the air in the pitching, went to the "Phillies" again; consequently Manager Mutrie gratified his request, and the youngster did his best. A single, a double, and a triple for visitors, and it was by the last kind of work that he secured it. Two more cannot be said about his ability, as he has not yet won a game. He was the first to be taken out in the eighth on John Ewing's single, a home run, and O'Rourke's crack for three bases to right. The Quakers' bats were quiet, but they got a single, two home runs in succession, and another single, winding up with a three-bagger by Ewing. Four runs were scored in the ninth, and the game was over.

It took two more to get two wins, and in the last inning he began to get a trifle wild, and it was at this period that the victory looked like it had come to stay.

On numerous occasions he retired a batter on three pitched balls, a very remarkable feat. Buckley, however, was not to be outdone, and it was by good fortune prevented him from becoming wild. Of the nine hits made off his delivery, in the ninth only one was a home run, and the last two were foul outs.

With the Philadelphia pitcher, it is by a young fellow with lots of skill and good command, who, at a fortunate point yesterday, was hissing his hit into the home team's life scattered. The score:

NEW YORK (N. Y.), 5; PHILADELPHIA (N. J.), 3.

The "Phillies" had their first hit of the game off the bat of Amos (2) Hutchinson, right fielder, and Wright's hit hard and often by the Philadelphia (P. L.) Club—The Brooklyn (N. Y.) have a lively time.
